HOODOO HANNIGAN

by JOSEPH MILLARD

THUNDER IN THE DAWN

CHAPTER XXXI

...rapped to a Jap gunboat. Hoodoo and his pals have no choice but to rescue Gin Yock—who might be either a Korean patriot or a wily Jap!

THE ... BOAT passed ... returned, ... [illegible] ... Manila ... [illegible] ... We ... [illegible] ... They ... the ... [illegible] ... Jap ... But ... the night ... drew us ... the ... [illegible] ... prisoners.

For ... tenth time Dawn Wade whispered. "If we were only sure of Gin Yock. He looks not like a Jap and in their Jap uniform, the crew accepted him unanimously. He claimed he was only pretending, he'd captured us, but how do we know it wasn't a trap?"

"I want that shaggy little man," Hoodoo muttered. "Don't ask me why, but I don't think he's crazy and I believe he really is a Korean, not a Jap."

"Sure," Allie growled. "If he's an blood-thirsty as most Koreans, beware lady those Japs when he runs amok!"

"Just the same," Dawn ... [illegible] ... we were ... terrorized ... escape from Manila and I'm not happy about leaving here to ..."

They were too surrounded ... this ... up ... sleep. So ... sat in the stifling, misty darkness, recovering as ... pairs, wondering ... how ... we could ... [illegible] ... past ... [illegible] ... We ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible]

[illegible] men." He lifted the [illegible] gun [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
